

The Aging Attorney

Elderly attorneys who have maintained sharp minds and continued to practice their craft want more than traditional retirement, but with the graying of the bar comes a new host of concerns. Among these concerns Alzheimer's and dementia figure prominently, both of which can impact colleagues, clients, families and a law practice. If you or someone you know is experiencing age-related issues in the practice of law, LCL can help.

Decode the Signs

Typically, attorneys facing age-related difficulties encounter time and place disorientation, problems with abstract thinking, short-term memory loss, difficulty with language and problems performing familiar tasks, all of which jeopardize maintaining a thriving practice.

Engage Support

LCL-CT's network of volunteers in the legal community can sensitively and discreetly help navigate the difficulties that aging attorneys face. We can educate and provide support to colleagues and family members of elderly lawyers, assist an elderly attorney in professionally closing a law practice, and help to ensure that a proud and blemish-free legal career is concluded with dignity. Don't hesitate to make a confidential call if you are seeking support – help is here.
